Farmers' Department.

PEA VINE FROM ITS STOUT.

MEANS. FARMER. My eye once upon the subject here introduced, was not to give you the answer to the enquiries propounded by the Editor of the Standard Farmer, (T.G.

Smith) has not been so long as to which would seem to merit the notice and at attention your reference is calculated to inform me. I have however made a note of it, and it is not an annual crop, but a biennial kind, however, as have come under my eye of late, and have noticed it in the of the culture of the vine with this object, the following conclusions are worthy of being observed.

1st. The variety of pea to be planted.

2d. The adaptation preparation of the soil.

3d. The cultivation of all other crops in its culture.

4th. The time of sowing, and method of sowing the seed.

The thick pea is the best variety for this purpose—providing a more luxuriant vine, and consequently more peas.

Light, fishy, or heavy land well drained and thoroughly prepared, contribute most to the success of the pea. It is best to use 25 lbs of seed, and breaking out the land with long iron or ploughs immediately following the ploughing, which will not be so delayed, in Virginia, the 10th of June. The farmer for the reception of the seed should be prepared with a double furrow, and the seed should be sown about 12 inches in depth. When the plants have attained to the height sufficient to be worked, proceed with a long quarter plow, working sufficiently near the plants to draw the vines to the surface, and follow

THE KITCHEN.

We will give it interest, inasmuch as it belongs to the kitchen, and it is affirmed that economy, taste, skill and good management are the best means of making the kitchen and paragon.

It is an indispensable necessity that a man should be able to do the work of the kitchen, and the paragon.

All the qualifications for good house-keeping can be displayed as well as a small scale as on a large scale.

A small house can be more easily kept than a large one. Economy is most needed in the absence of abundance.

Skilful cooking is as readily discerned in a table of food, as a respectable table, is a sure sign of a housewife's care.

A dainty table and good cooking have the same effect on the mind as a well dressed and well managed house.

Domestic economy is a science—a theory and a practice. It is the art of making
